Jun 09, 2012 · About all the owner can do with slipping automatics is trying a transmission fluid and filter change to see if transmission revives and stops slipping. The bottom pan is removed, fluid (about 6-8 quarts) is drained, and a new filter is installed before the pan is replaced with a new gasket, sealed up, and fresh fluid added. Sometimes it helps ...

I recently bought a 2003 Ford Ranger Edge with the 3.0L V6 FFV Engine and the 5R44e transmission, rear (2) wheel drive. Discovered that it had been running "over full" of transmission fluid when started having issues. O/D light flashes on and off, Shows trouble codes P1000, PO734 & PO735. Shift's hard. I have reverse, 1st & 2nd gears.

The sensor is submerged in hydraulic fluid continuously which causes case problems. Many times hydraulic flow is restricted or O ring sealing has initiated the problem. In any event, this is a complicated process better left to a transmission specialist. Replacing external transmission range sensors: Block the wheels and apply the parking brake.
